“It’s an honor to have such an impressive group of industry leaders filling these critical roles,” said Barb Marder, president and CEO at EBRI. “Their understanding of EBRI and support of its mission, paired with their invaluable experience, insights and fresh perspectives, will help continue to grow EBRI’s reach and value we deliver for our members and the industry.”

Sandy McCarthy, president of Retirement Services at OneAmerica Financial, will chair EBRI’s Board of Trustees and lead the Executive Committee. She succeeds past chair Josh Cohen, managing director at PGIM. Cohen will continue to stay involved with the Executive Committee and serve as Emeritus. Jon Kessler, president and CEO at HealthEquity, will begin his role as vice chair.

“This is a very special time for EBRI,” said McCarthy. “The organization has always played a significant and vital role in the retirement and employee benefits landscape, and that won’t change. But there’s also a sense of forward-looking energy and optimism about taking EBRI to the next level and continuing to amplify and enhance its impact. There’s incredible opportunity ahead, and I’m honored to be a part of EBRI’s next chapter.”

McCarthy, who previously served as vice chair on EBRI’s Executive Committee, also noted her gratitude and respect for past and current EBRI board and committee leadership. “It’s been incredibly fulfilling to be a part of EBRI’s board, and to work alongside a team that’s dedication and passion for EBRI is unmatched. I have been and continue to be impressed and inspired by every one of these industry leaders,” said McCarthy. “I also want to specially recognize and thank Josh Cohen, who chaired the board during a milestone year, as EBRI marked its 45th anniversary and welcomed a new CEO. Josh’s leadership was truly remarkable.”
