

Are More Americans Saving For Retirement Today?

Overall, workers of today are slightly less likely to say they have saved for retirement than workers of 10 years ago—but that’s not the whole picture, according to a report by the nonpartisan Employee Benefit Research Institute.

The decline in those who reported saving for retirement occurs among those under age 55, especially among those ages 25–34, according to the Retirement Confidence Survey, the longest-running survey of its kind in the nation.

Workers age 55 and older today are actually more likely than their counterparts a decade ago to say they have saved for retirement.

Additional information from the 2014 Retirement Confidence Survey is available online here.

The Employee Benefit Research Institute is a private, nonpartisan, nonprofit research institute based in Washington, DC, that focuses on health, savings, retirement, and economic security issues. EBRI does not lobby and does not take policy positions. The work of EBRI is made possible by funding from its members and sponsors, which includes a broad range of public, private, for-profit and nonprofit organizations. For more information go to www.ebri.org or www.asec.org

